

Kevin Dier

Kevin is an executive coach, consultant, speaker, and business expert. With over 12 years of consulting and coaching experience as Vice President of Business Development for Johnstone Supply, Inc. (a $1.6 billion Cooperative consisting of 120+ small businesses), and 32 years of small business experience in total, he excels at contributing to individual executive development as well as leadership teams.

Kevin's clients ask him to return year-after-year due to his ability to bring clarity, accountability and follow through to their efforts – building momentum and supporting accomplishments.

FOCUS & FOLLOW THROUGH: Kevin's overall approach starts with clarity – taking the time to listen fully and find out what his clients truly want to achieve and become. Of course, following the path to one's goals requires commitment, which is why helping people build personal commitment to outcomes is the second mainstay of Kevin's coaching style. The third core aspect of his work is to leverage his own experience and unconventional nature to provide the tools, structure and personal support for his clients to develop their innate strengths, increase their interpersonal influence and ultimately accomplish their outcomes.

Kevin is a licensed KRH Consultant, a Certified Hudson Institute Coach, a Myers Briggs Certified Practitioner and a certified coach by the International Coaching Federation.

As a devoted fund-raiser for the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center, Kevin has raised nearly $60,000 participating in various mountain climbs including two attempts on the highest peak in North America, Mount McKinley (a.k.a. Denali). Kevin raised his two children in Oregon City, Oregon where he currently resides.
